A new class of 3-arylidenyl quinolizinium salt derivatives, with a unique B,D ring fusion structure, were designed and synthesized. Their inhibitory effects on melanin synthesis and tyrosinase activity were studied, and their potential tyrosinase inhibitory activities were correlated with the location and connectivity of the aromatic substituents in the molecular structure. In addition, the molecular docking between the target compounds and mushroom tyrosinase (MT) was also performed to explain the inhibition mechanisms. Our results indicate that most of the compounds showed remarkable inhibitory effects against melanin synthesis, and the corresponding IC50 values ranged from 8.85 μM to 6.18 μM. The replacement of the bulky functional groups such as a tetramethylguanidine with a short alkyl chain decreased the melanogenesis inhibitory activity. Among all the target compounds, 2-ethyl-3-(2-ethylphenyl) quinolizinium salts were found to be the most potent inhibitors. The docking studies revealed that the compounds bound to tyrosinase via the quinolizinium ring, the ethyl group located on the aromatic ring, and the adjacent alkyl group played key roles in inhibiting tyrosinase activity.Q: Appending Data to a MongoDB document using node.js I am writing a standalone Node.
