What's New In Samplist 039;s CD Player?

This is a small Java program I made to take audio CD files off the Internet and play them in any format, at any speed, while keeping the CD's TOC (table of contents) and track listing in memory. In addition, it gives you the option of making a track listing and copying it to the clipboard. The source code is included, so that if there is any interest, you can make changes and add features yourself. If you have a hard drive recorder, use the "Samplist's CD Player" function to start a session and listen to the track you want. This function stores the track number and time of start in memory. When you stop the track, it saves the current track number and time, and then you can start playing another track and this will be saved automatically. It also allows you to make a track listing which will be saved with the track number and time and can be copied to the clipboard. To listen to a region: Open the "Samplist's CD Player" function, select the "Loop" function, and press F5. This will enter a looping mode and start playing from the track number you specify. This is useful if you have a sampler. You can press F5 again to exit the loop and go back to the single-track playback.
